William Shakespeare

"One day afternoon of that cold winter time the first December morning, whilst I was in the city, after breakfast, I went from a house to the high office in which I had office and changed the terms of my lease, thinking of the old and new of the city."

"All the year, that has passed, has not been so happy as the first of the year, when I was in the city, after breakfast, I went from a house to the high office in which I had office and changed the terms of my lease, thinking of the old and new of the city."
