The Effect of the War: A Nation Divided and Reborn (1844-1877)

The mid-19th century in the United States was dominated by the burning question of the Civil War, a conflict that would determine the nation's very soul. From 1844 to 1877, Americans witnessed the country's greatest regional tensions, a brutal war, and the process of reconstruction.

The admission of the Mississippi Territory as a state in 1848, the first of many, was a significant step in the process of westward expansion. The territory's vast resources, including cotton and sugar, were a major draw for settlers and investors alike.

The Supreme Court, which had been established by the Constitution, was a powerful institution that could settle the most contentious issues. In 1857, the Dred Scott decision, which ruled that African Americans could not be citizens, was a major setback for the anti-slavery movement. The decision, which was based on a technicality, effectively closed the door to the possibility of citizenship for African Americans.
