

General

Powertronic

This service manual describes the design and function of the automatic gearbox Powertronic Generation III (produced from December 1995). The illustration above represents VT1706PT alternatively VT1906PT equipped with power take-off PTPT for the propeller shaft drive.

General information on the Powertronic VT1605PT, VT1706PT and VT1906PT

Powertronic is a fully automatic gearbox with electronic control and is available in a 5- or 6-speed variant with or without a retarder. VT1605PT is 5-speed.

The gearbox control unit (TECU) exchanges information with the gear selector control unit (GECU) and the vehicle's other control units to be able to regulate the gear changes in an optimal way.

The gearbox consists of a hydraulic torque converter with a direct clutch, so-called Lock-up, a number of planetary gears where the gear wheels are continuously engaged, brakes that lock the different parts in the planetary gears, forward clutch, reverse clutch and an electronically controlled system that monitors and regulates the gear changing function.

On gear changing the different planetary gear parts "connect" together with the help of the clutch discs. Due to this gear changing can occur without the gearbox being disengaged from the engine. This is called gear changing without loss of power (Powershift). The driver can choose between different programs for varying driving conditions.

The hydraulic torque converter gears up the engine torque which gives the vehicle a very high traction when starting. At the same time the Powertronic is gentle to the vehicle since the engine is always running in its best engine speed range and the hydraulic torque converter absorbs all the jerkiness in the powertrain.

The torque converter is equipped with a direct clutch (Lock-up) which locks the turbine rotor and the pump impeller to each other. The direct clutch, which is connected to all the gears, gives low running costs through high efficiency and low fuel consumption.

Powertronic is designed for heavy transport, for instance work on construction sites and refuse applications.

The transmission ratio range gives in the lowest gear a high traction when starting which is advantageous when driving off-road. The highest gear however is high geared (1:1), which gives lower fuel consumption when driving on main roads.
