

Reasons to why Euthanasia Should be Legalized

5 pages | 1071 words

What would you do if your mom had been in a terrible car accident? She has been in a coma for months and you finally realize that she will not wake up. The doctors inform you that you now have a choice to make: keep her on life support, or let her pass on. What would you choose? In this situation Euthanasia would be a likely option, due to the severity of the case. Euthanasia should be legalized because you are allowing someone that is living with pain to finally achieve some tranquility, it is saving the family from prolonged emotional hardship, and giving a struggling patient some type of quality of life. Euthanasia is the painless killing of a patient that is suffering from an incurable, irremediable and painful disease or in an irreversible coma. There are two types of Euthanasia, which include voluntary and involuntary. Voluntary Euthanasia is conducted with consent and Involuntary Euthanasia is carried on without consent. With Involuntary Euthanasia, the decision to induce pain-free killing is made by another person, due to the fact that the patient is incapable of doing so by themselves (Nordqvist). Euthanasia is only legal in one state, though Physician-Assisted suicide is legal in California, Montana, Oregon, Vermont, and Washington. Nevertheless, it has very strict requirements. Physician-Assisted suicide is similar to Euthanasia in that it is the putting to rest of a patient that is struggling to live, whether it be physically or emotionally. There are always two sides to any argument, so there are people who do not agree that Euthanasia should be allowed to be practiced. They disagree for a plethora of reasons, but the main reason is religious contradictions. Their belief is that you are taking power away from God and are not allowing Him to do His job. Those who disagree will say that you are going against God's will by killing, and that doctors are going against God's will if they assist you. How much power is too much for doctors? This is a very controversial question in this debate. There are many people who believe that we are giving a great deal of power to medical professionals when we allow them to give medications to end the lives of others. The opposing side believes that it is wrong for doctors to have the ability to give you pharmaceuticals that end your life. The last reason that those who think Euthanasia is immoral, is that they believe that there is the possibility of recovery. The individuals who usually partake in euthanization are those who are in, or have a family member in, a coma or those that have a terminal cancer, in which the possibility for recovery is highly unlikely. There are some people who do not know what the purpose of Euthanasia is. The point of Euthanasia is to assist an individual that is suffering from a horrible disease to a place of tranquility. People turn to Euthanasia for several reasons such as feeling incapacitated, exhausted, and uncomfortable with their current way of life. If the individual experiences an abundant loss of function, pain,...
