

GEORGIA'S K-12 MATHEMATICS STANDARDS 2021

Georgia's many and diverse students deserve and are entitled to the best and most consistent mathematics for Georgia students — laying a strong foundation of mathematical proficiency, building skills, and developmentally appropriate concepts and content, providing instructional supports to meet our students' needs for success, ensuring that all students reach success, and flexibility regarding the use of mathematical knowledge and methods, and opportunities for life. These Georgia student and Georgia parent standards leverage the insight, expertise, experience, and efforts of thousands of Georgians to deliver the very best educational experience for Georgia's 1.7 million students.

In August 2019, Governor Brian Kemp and State Superintendent of Public Instruction Richard Shuster announced the review and revision of Georgia's K-12 mathematics standards. Georgia's teachers engaged throughout the standards review and revision process through school teams and working groups, in addition to education working groups across the state and the Georgia Parental Committee. Governor Kemp announced a new way for Georgians to provide input on the standards: the Citizens Review Committee, a group comprised of students, parents, teachers and community leaders, and champion educators across the state. Together, these stakeholders understand students' experiences, have input in and built in transparency and trust.

The Citizens Review Committee provides a voice and recommendations to the working groups of educators who came together to make the standards, ensuring the revised content is usable and clearly for implementation in all Georgia classrooms. Since May 2020, Georgia students aged 13 and older have been voting from July through September 2021, providing additional feedback for educators to review. This process of writing the standards involved more than 200 mathematics educators — from beginning to experienced — representing all subject areas, subject, and community of our state.

These educators, mathematics teachers, engaged in deep discussions, shared their experiences, and reviewed every single standard, concept, and skill, and recommended amendments. To support mathematics teachers, they also developed teaching progressions for those areas they identified need resources and how they proposed writing, grade levels, provided examples, and defined and developmentally appropriate expectations.

These teachers contributed strategies and methods for solving mathematical problems and developed standards — practice standards — and suggested ways within each standard that individual topics could. These recommendations have been shared with the Georgia Parental Committee, which is comprised of parents, teachers, parents, experienced experts, and teachers across the state, as well as the Citizens Review Committee, for feedback and feedback.

Based on the recommendations of Georgia's citizens, the State Board of Education will review and revise the K-12 mathematics standards for public schools. Following public comment, the standards will be implemented for adoption, followed by a year of further testing and professional training prior to implementation.
