List three reasons why marine ecosystems are so important.

1. The evaporation of water from the oceans provides most of the planet's rainfall.
2. Ocean temperatures have a major effect on world climate and wind patterns.
3. Through photosynthesis, marine algae and photosynthetic bacteria provide a substantial portion of the world's oxygen and consume a large amount of carbon dioxide.

What are regulators?

Regulators are organisms that use systems to control some of their internal body functions. Example: Warm-blooded animals maintain a constant body temperature even when the external temperature is very hot or cold.

What is a renewable resource?

These are resources that can regenerate if they are alive or can be replenished by biochemical cycles if they are nonliving.

Define ecological niche.

The niche is the organism's "profession" or role in the community. It is the sum of the species' use of the biotic and abiotic resources in the environment.

Describe big-bang reproduction and give an example.

This is reproduction in which an organism produces all of its offspring in a single event.

Example: Pacific salmon spend several years growing and maturing. Near the end of their life they spawn, producing millions and millions of eggs, followed by death.

What is the greenhouse effect?

The greenhouse effect is a natural occurrence in which heat is retained in the atmosphere by a blanket of greenhouse gases. These gases trap a portion of the sun's energy and retain this heat in the atmosphere.

Why does life on Earth depend upon the decomposers?

Some of the molecules released during decay are consumed by the decomposers, but some of these molecules are returned to the soil or water. The action of the decomposers makes the nutrients present in the dead bodies and wastes of organisms available to ecosystems. The process of decomposition recycles the essential chemical nutrients.

Each of the slides contains one question and one answer.
