

John F. Kennedy, Charles Beitzelmann, and American Government, 1960-1968

Principles of U.S. Government

Declarations of Independence

"unalienable rights" (natural rights are the rights that humans have)
 "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed" (consent)
 "Securing these [the rights from the consent of the governed] is the chief duty of government"

Unalienable rights

"unalienable rights" basic fundamental rights for all persons

Popular sovereignty

People are the ultimate source of government power and authority

Consent

consent government authority is based on a society's agreement to follow certain laws and customs for violating some individual freedoms that were promised, therefore a government is not allowed to do so

U.S. Constitution

first document of the U.S. government that established government

- separation of powers
- federalism
- executive
- legislative

Bill of Rights

protecting individual rights, added to the constitution to protect individual rights that were not protected by the constitution (first ten amendments)

Regulation

is a government form of regulation government sets rules, laws, and standards to make sure everything is fair

Models of Representative Democracy

Participatory democracy individuals participate in the political process (citizens) citizens have a voice in the government

Examples

participatory budgeting, public hearings, etc.

Pluralist democracy multiple groups compete for power in the political process no single group has a monopoly on power

Examples

interest groups, political parties, etc.

Elite democracy

power is held by a small group of people (elite)
 citizens have a voice in the government

oligarchy, plutocracy, etc.
