Chapter 1: Basic economic ideas and resource allocation

Self-assessment task 1.1 (page 16)

- 1 Opportunity cost can be defined as the cost of an activity or decision expressed in terms of the next best alternative foregone. The trade-offs might include:

Governments – in banning food exports, the government is giving up the benefits from export earnings and so affecting the balance of payments current account.

Farmers – in choosing to grow crops for biofuels, farmers are reducing the amount of land available for other crops and livestock production.

Consumers – with less land being devoted to food production there might be a reduction in the supply of foodstuffs so consumers are giving up the benefit of cheaper food.

- 2 Answers might include:

	Costs	Benefits
Consumers	■ Higher food prices.	■ Relatively cheaper fuel compared to petrol.
Farmers	■ Higher oil prices and animal feed leading to higher production costs.	■ Higher prices and higher earnings for sugar cane farmers.
Firms	■ Higher oil prices leading to higher production costs.	■ Cheaper source of energy in the short run.
Governments	■ Social unrest leading to higher security costs for the government.	■ Reduced carbon emissions leading to reduced global warming. ■ Higher export earnings for Brazil. ■ Environmental sustainability in the long run.

Self-assessment task 1.2 (pages 16–17)

- 1 The projection suggests that the population is ageing and that there will be fewer younger workers to support them as the size of the labour force declines after 2015. Thus there will be an increase in the dependency ratio.

- 2 With an ageing population, decisions regarding what to produce, how and for whom will be affected in the following ways:

a what to produce

A rise in the average age of the population, with more older people and fewer younger people, will alter the types of products being produced. It is likely, for instance, that more resources will be devoted to providing health and residential care for elderly people and there will be more focus on providing forms of entertainment for the over 50s. It is also possible that fewer resources will be used for making products such as children's toys and for building affordable housing.

b how to produce

Because there will be more retired people and proportionately fewer workers, capital-intensive methods of production will increasingly be used. In other words, more machines and other capital goods may be used relative to labour. In addition, the government may decide to raise the retirement age or provide tax incentives for workers to continue working past the retirement age.

c for whom to produce

In the light of an ageing population the government may try to influence who receives these products. To ensure that the growing number and percentage of elderly people receive an adequate supply of products, the government may increase the taxes levied on the comparatively smaller proportion of workers and spend more on pensions. Such actions would transfer some purchasing power from the labour force to the retired.
