1. The process of identifying the relationship between variables is called correlation. It is a statistical measure that indicates the extent to which two or more variables fluctuate together. A positive correlation indicates that as one variable increases, the other variable also tends to increase. A negative correlation indicates that as one variable increases, the other variable tends to decrease.
2. The coefficient of correlation is a statistical measure that indicates the strength and direction of the relationship between two variables. It is a numerical value that ranges from -1 to +1. A value of +1 indicates a perfect positive correlation, a value of -1 indicates a perfect negative correlation, and a value of 0 indicates no correlation.
3. The scatter plot is a graphical representation of the relationship between two variables. It is a plot of individual data points on a coordinate plane. The x-axis represents one variable, and the y-axis represents the other variable. The points are plotted at the intersection of the two variables. The pattern of the points indicates the direction and strength of the relationship.
4. The line of best fit is a straight line that is drawn through a scatter plot. It is a line that represents the general trend of the data. It is used to predict the value of one variable based on the value of the other variable.
5. The coefficient of determination is a statistical measure that indicates the proportion of the variance in the dependent variable that is explained by the independent variable. It is a numerical value that ranges from 0 to 1. A value of 1 indicates that the independent variable explains all the variance in the dependent variable, and a value of 0 indicates that the independent variable explains none of the variance.
