particular Henry David Thoreau's literary walks and their visual counterparts in American landscape painting. Although Thoreau's perambulations in New World nature have been stated in scholarship, no study has offered a comparative analysis nor has the philosophic contemplative aspect of his art of Walking been sufficiently studied. The present study puts his walking pattern into a transatlantic as well as interdisciplinary context and illuminates the uniquely American aesthetic philosophic considerations underlying the genre of the walk in American nineteenth century literature and painting.

Walking in Turbulent Waters Eliana Bueche, 2013-08-28 Her earliest memory was of the time when she was a tiny baby lifted by strong arms to the light in a train compartment. Adrienne's adult life is distracted by daydreams of childhood of her powerful uncle Eladio, her best childhood friend Tomas, and more. Looking back, she can see every mistake she ever made. The uncertainty of her true identity draws her into a realm beyond imagination. She can't even trust her own memory now to help her determine which childhood traumas were real and which were the workings of a mind too young to understand. To this day, one question haunts her: if she could have just accepted the life she was so desperate to leave behind, would she be happier today? Now her life is defined by her success as a real estate developer, an art dealer, and an innovative architect with visions of reinventing entire communities that celebrate both function and design simultaneously. She drowns her feelings by constantly achieving the impossible, often falling prey to her own desires and the cunning schemes of the unpredictable man who invaded her life. When a phone call from Spain sends Adrienne rushing back across the Atlantic, can she dare to hope that the answers that had eluded her throughout her life await?
