AT&T Ends Galaxy Note 7 Swaps

By Thomas H. Doherty
And Georgia Wells

AT&T Inc. said it will stop issuing new Galaxy Note 7 smartphones to replace the ones turned in by its customers, further complicating a massive recall of the Samsung Electronics Co. devices and sowing confusion among consumers after multiple reports of the devices overheating.

The phone carrier, one of the biggest distributors of Samsung phones, said Galaxy Note 7 customers can return their phones for different models while Samsung and U.S. safety authorities investigate why several phones melted in the past week.

At least four Samsung phones smoked or caught fire during the week, including one on a Southwest Airlines Co. flight before takeoff. It isn't clear if they were Note 7 devices, or if the problems were faulty lithium-ion batteries.

"We're no longer exchanging new Note 7s at this time, pending further investigation of these reported incidents," AT&T said in a statement.

Samsung is working with authorities including the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission to investigate the new incidents, a Samsung spokeswoman said Wednesday.

Regarding AT&T's suspension, Samsung added, "We respect their decision."

The CPSC doesn't know if the most recent incidents involved replacement Note 7 phones, a spokesman for the agency said Sunday. "We would like to speak with each customer and assess what happened," said CPSC spokesman Scott Wolfson. "It is important for consumers to be reminded that a full refund is one of the options available."

Samsung launched a recall of the 1 million Note 7 phones in the U.S. last month after discovering that the lithium-ion bat-

On Wednesday, a Galaxy Note 7 started smoking in the hand of 13-year-old Abby Zeln, according to her father, Andrew Zeln, of Farmington, Minn. He said the device was a replacement phone from a Verizon Communications Inc. store.

Another Samsung customer, Shawn Miller, of Richmond, Va., said he was woken up Wednesday morning by his replacement Note 7 phone making a loud noise and emitting smoke and flames. "We are taking every report seriously," Samsung said.

"We are taking every report seriously," Samsung said in a statement.

The decision by AT&T to stop offering replacement Note 7s comes after U.S. phone carriers said they would allow customers to replace their phones a second time.

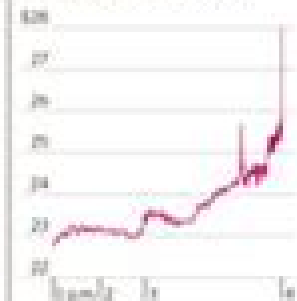

After offering to distribute new replacement phones on Monday, Verizon on Tuesday said the company is completely out of stock of Note 7 devices.

Samsung's devices aren't the only ones to catch fire. Lithium-ion batteries, which power many mobile devices in addition to Samsung's, have been known to catch fire. The FAA has recorded 179 incidents involving batteries aboard aircraft from 1995 to January of this year.
