Stocks Slide Amid Downturn Fears

Dow finishes nearly 500 points lower as investors' worry about manufacturing mounts.

By Paul Vigna

U.S. stocks fell sharply for a second straight session Wednesday as investors worried about slowing U.S. manufacturing activity that could pose a major obstacle to economic recovery.

The start of the fourth quarter has tested investors' confidence—the Dow Jones Industrial Average has slumped about 840 points, or 3.1%, over the past two sessions. The S&P 500 index has moved up what were already marginally gains over the past 12 months, a period that encompasses both last year's fourth-quarter rout and this year's recovery.

Despite a plethora of concerns this year—a U.S.-China trade war, a record low for the Federal Reserve's interest rate, and a slowdown in corporate earnings—U.S. investors consistently bet on continuing economic growth, even as markets overseas faltered. That bet was upended after data Tuesday showed a gauge of U.S. factory activity contracted for the second consecutive month, falling to its lowest level since June 2009. Wednesday's grim news also reflected the pace of the U.S. economy's recovery, which showed the pace of the U.S. economy's recovery, which showed the pace of the U.S. economy's recovery.

The Perilous Road Out of Venezuela

A young couple finds how difficult it is to leave: 'I feel like the last violinist on the Titanic'

By Kaitlyn Vane

CARACAS, Venezuela—Jonathan Morales and Delfina Loyo were ready to leave. Mr. Morales, a 26-year-old chef, had hidden his passport and $250 in the waistband of his underwear.

Ms. Loyo, a 23-year-old nurse, had a grilling complaint for the trip, packed up by her grandmother. All they carried was two backpacks and a few personal items.

Two dozen members of their family had either abandoned Venezuela. Their remaining relatives, all the very old, who could no longer leave the country, were off that June day. They were going to meet their relatives.

Plans to leave had been in the air for months. A 22-hour ride stretched in front of them. Minutes after the bus departed, a man stood up, saying he was going to the airport.
