Abstract—Background: The recent adaptation of the Greenough communication scale (GCS) after the revised communication and Symbolic Developmental Profile (SDP) has enabled the use of the GCS in a wider range of research.

It is the most common form of the learning curve (Figure 1). The learning curve is the line on which cost decreases as cumulative production increases. It is the relationship between unit cost and cumulative production. The learning curve is used in estimating the cost of the product, generally, at the time of the contract, before the contract is awarded. It is used in the contract award process to determine the cost of the product.
