

What is the ideal cell size? +66

As you have observed, cells are small. Consider your little toe: it is made of about 2-3 billion cells! A newly-made cell will grow, but once it reaches a certain size it will divide to form two new cells rather than growing bigger. Why is this? Why aren't you made of a few dozen, or a few hundred cells, instead of trillions? Why don't single-celled organisms like amoebas and paramecia grow as big as a human? In this lab, we will investigate this question using model cells.

1. What is the basic structure of a cell?
All cells have a cell membrane, ribosomes, cytoplasm, DNA. +2
2. What are some factors that could limit the ability of cells to survive?
Environment, predation, mutations, disease, the ability to obtain nutrients and get rid of waste +2
3. Could any of these factors also limit the size of cells? Write your ideas here.
The ability to process nutrients is probably the biggest limiting factor for growth and cell size. If a cell is unable to obtain the nutrients that it needs then its growth would be reduced and possible death would occur. +2
4. How do cells obtain materials they need and get rid of waste products?
Cells obtain the material they need through the cell membrane (diffusion), once in the cell then the cell must transport those materials throughout the cell to all of the different organelles and the same must occur with waste except the cell will move this material out of the cell. +2
