Chapter 14, Clip #1 Homework Questions 1-9
Autumn 2014/15

1. What methodological approach? What methodological strategy does predominant think unit? What do they agree?

The basic of analytical method is the combination of past market data, and an opinion used to selling volume or market trading activity by a group of investors (analysts), as a basis to estimate future market price. There are two different two articles. The first one is the most pure information in fundamental like value, earnings, cash flow, interest rates, and so on.

2. How do they include the price for comparison and volume data, in their work? Is the demand volume or a graph?

3. What is it that technique are working?

The main thing fundamental thinking is not working...approach to growth from trading or working for market.

4. What do technical analysis believe about supply and demand of investment?

The basic of analysis believe that market value is price in supply and demand for the investment. They also believe that the supply-demand relationship is governed by rational factors and technical factors.

5. Why do technical analysis consider trading volume?

Trading volume is important factor to measure how much interest and commitment. A technical analysis considers price change and trading volume to assess the significance of trading activity.

6. What do technical analysis think about company fundamental?

The basic one is not really fundamental to measure future value. They believe that the market is the most best prediction. They believe that change in price tends to be predictable. Fundamental changes in fundamental variables make the price very volatile.

7. How do technical analysis believe that some fundamental like, in interest in terms of trading and the terms of different groups, of investors that are involved?

The basic one believe some fundamental is directly demonstrated through a number of trading volume supply and demand (flow) in the future. There is analysis. Finally, the result is shown.
