

8 Using a mattress wire and a floor (or curved) needle the little toes are sewn in, each stitch about the width of the hand in a back stitch formation.

9 As they progress over the seat, move the hair with the fingers to open it up and blend the hair filling into an even layer, with no lumps or hollow spots.

10 The hair filling has to be well retained by using a layer of cotton wool wadding, both under and over the cotton covering. The wadding is set onto the seat, flat squares, using temporary fabric at all four sides, and pulled to a good tightness.

11 The piece is then stretched out tightly towards the corners and back, hair filling is allowed to creep under or overlie with the backing.

Beginning at the back of the seat, move the cotton down and add backs about 10 (2 cent) apart. Once the cotton surface towards the front and to again. The seat sides are then dealt with in the same way.

12 Finally, stretch the cotton head into each corner whilst and take down.

Check the edges for neatness as the fabric is hammered permanently home. If preferred, at the fringe for the cotton in a seat of this kind can be made with 1/4 inch (2 cm) grip pins, which are generally finer and have small heads. Another type of pin wedding is cut and carefully fixed to the outline of the seat then formed a few inches short of the backing line.

17 Using grip pins, in a matching colour if possible, set the upholstery fabric onto the seat along the back edge. At this point the fabric is centred to ensure that any stripes or patterns are kept up with the centre of the chair seat. A tape measure can be used if necessary. The cover is now stretched and fixed using the sequence that was used for the cotton. Lift grip pins where necessary and adjust the tension of the fabric to create an even edge facing, before hammering them home permanently. Turn the upholstery fabric close to the backing line to ensure a finish which is in line and parallel with the chair seat rail edges.

18 An Oxford grip was chosen for the seat finish. This was glued down with a clear fabric adhesive and the grip was carefully milled at each corner. The starting point for a fixed or grip finish is usually just inside one of the back corners.
