

The propellant of this cartridge contains a specially producing agent for one special meeting period.

The projectile consists of a hollow steel forging with a hemispherical nose, a streamlined ogive, and spinning vortical rotating band. A base cover is welded to the base of the projectile for added protection against the entrance of hot gases from the propelling charges during firing. The propellant cavity is filled with it immediately or will (stalled) immediately in liquid form. A steel nose plug, having a female nose thread, with a primer filled incense casing is threaded into the nose of the projectile providing a seal for the filler. A tapered booster charge is placed inside the booster casing and a PC nose threaded into the plug. The cartridge case contains a peroxaceton primer assembly and seven individually bagged and numbered propelling charge increments. The base of the cartridge case is drilled and the primer assembly pressed into the base. The peroxaceton primer assembly consists of a peroxaceton ignition element and a perforated flash tube containing black powder. The seven numbered increment bags are tied together, in numerical order, with wire ties. These are assembled

Tactics Techniques and Procedures for Munitions Handlers Mine Countermine Operations Munitions Handling During Deployed Operations 101 Propellant Residues Deposition from Small Arms Munitions ,2007 Military live fire training missions utilize a variety of energetic materials that are never completely consumed during firing In February 2007 the U S Army Cold Regions Research and Engineering Laboratory teamed with the Vermont National Guard at Camp Ethan Allen to conduct tests to determine the propellant residues deposition related to the firing of small arms Samples were collected from the snow surface at the firing points for 5 56 7 62 9 and 12 7 mm 0 50 cal weapons as well as from areas up to 40 m downrange Six tests were conducted utilizing five weapon systems Samples were analyzed to derive an estimate of the mass of unreacted energetics deposited from each activity The areas sampled at the 5 56 mm firing points contained 1 8 and 1 3 mg NG 1 1% and 0 80% original mass per round the 7 62 mm firing point contained 1 5 mg NG and 0 0018 mg DNT 0 56% and 0 048% original mass per round the 9 mm firing point contained 2 1 mg NG 5 4% original mass per round and the 12 7 mm firing points averaged 11 mg NG 0 73% original mass per round These results indicate that although consumption rates for this class of ammunition are high accumulation of energetic residues should be considered for range sustainment programs A Shot in the Dark: A History of the U.S. Army Asymmetric Warfare Group Paul J. Cook,2024-05-14 This book presents the U S Army Asymmetric Warfare Group AWG as an example of successful change by the Army in wartime It argues that creating the AWG required senior leaders to create a vision differing from the Army s self conceptualization change bureaucratic processes to turn the vision into an actual unit and then place the new unit in the hands of uniquely qualified leaders to build and sustain it In doing this it considers the forces influencing change within the Army and argues the two most significant are its self conceptualization and institutional bureaucracy The work explores three major subject areas that provide historical context The first is the Army s institutional history from the early 1950s through 2001 This period begins with the Army seeking to validate its place in America s national security strategy and ends with the Army trying to chart a path into the post Cold War future The Army s history is largely one of asymmetric warfare The work thus examines several campaigns that offered lessons for subsequent wars Some lessons the Army took to heart others it ignored As the AWG was a direct outgrowth of the failures and frustrations the Army experienced in Afghanistan and Iraq the book examines these campaigns and identifies the specific problems that led senior Army leaders to create the AWG Finally the work chronicles the AWG s creation in 2006 growth and re assignment from the Army staff to a fully fledged organization subordinate to the U S Army Training and Doctrine Command in 2011 to its deactivation This action resulted not from the unit s failure to adapt to a post insurgency Army focusing on modernization Rather it resulted from the Army failing to realize that while the AWG was a product of counterinsurgency it provided the capability to support the Army during a period of great strategic and institutional uncertainty Index of Specifications and Standards , Explosive Ordnance Disposal Specialist United States.
