Perceiving Animals Erica Fudge, 2002 The boundaries between human and beast forged a rugged philosophical landscape across early modern England Spectators gathered in London's Bear Garden to watch the callous and brutal baiting of animals A wave of new scientists performed vivisections on live animals to learn more about the human body In Perceiving Animals the British scholar Erica Fudge traces the dangers and problems of anthropocentrism in texts written from 1558 to 1649 Meticulous examinations of scientific legal political literary and religious writings offer unique and fascinating depictions of human perceptions about the natural world Views carried over from bestiaries medieval treatises on animals posited animals as nonsentient beings whose merits were measured solely by what provisions they afforded humans food medicine clothing travel labor scientific knowledge Without consciences or faith animals were deemed far inferior to humans While writings from the period asserted an enormous biological superiority

Fudge contends actual human behavior and logic worked sometimes accidentally to close the alleged gap In the Bear Garden even a man of the lowest social rank had power over a tortured animal sinking him though below the beasts The beast fable itself fails to show a true understanding of animals as it merely attributes human characteristics to beasts in an attempt to teach humanist ideals Scholars and writers continually turned to the animal world for reflection Despite this scientists of the period used animals for empirical and medical knowledge recognizing biological and spiritual similarities but refusing to renege human superiority Including an insightful reexamination of Ben Jonson s Volpone and fascinating looks at works by Francis Bacon Edward Coke and Richard Overton among others Fudge probes issues of animal ownership and biological and spiritual superiority in early modern England that resonate with philosophical quandaries still relevant in contemporary society
