

Copper In Silver Nitrate Lab

by Charles Deaton

Background

The purpose of this lab is to find the theoretical percentage yield of the reaction. The reaction consisted of copper(Cu) and silver nitrate(AgNO_3), which after 3 class days of reacting, turned into copper nitrate($\text{Cu}(\text{NO}_3)_2$), and silver(Ag). In that third class day, they massed out that it had copper wire, and Ag and all silver nitrate solution was evaporated. Once it was evaporated, they were trying to see the color of a small beaker with a good portion of the wire submerged in AgNO_3 and of solution. Observations were made and the three beakers were left out until day 3. When students returned a couple days later, and recorded what they noticed in a table. Studying their table they were not all the solution was reduced with water so that the precipitate were like that beaker. This mass of the wire was taken again, and a piece of filter paper was also weighed. The filter paper was then set up in a ring stand with a funnel and a large beaker beneath. The concentrated blue $\text{Cu}(\text{NO}_3)_2$ beaker was poured through the filter paper, and mixed with more water. This was to remove all of the reactants from the beaker. Day 4 was to record the final mass of our products so that filter paper that could be dry from the days prior. After everything was measured and written in a table, calculations were done to find the theoretical yield, percent yield, and percent error of the lab.
