

CHAPTER 2

QUESTIONS

1. The accounting system generates a variety of reports for use by various decision makers. Among the most common are general-purpose financial statements, management reports, tax returns, and other reports prepared for government agencies such as the SEC.
2. A manual and an automated accounting system are similar in that both are designed to serve the same information-gathering and processing functions. Both systems also use the same underlying accounting concepts and principles. The differences between a manual and an automated accounting system involve some mechanical aspects, time requirements, and the appearance of records and reports. Due to advanced technology and reduced prices, today almost all successful businesses of any size use computers to assist in the various accounting functions.
3. The accounting process involves certain procedures used by businesses to produce financial statement data. The recording phase of the accounting process consists of those procedures used in the continuing activity of analyzing, recording, and classifying business transactions in the various books of record (journals and ledgers) during the fiscal period. The reporting phase of the accounting process consists of those procedures used at the end of the fiscal period to update and summarize data collected during the recording phase. Financial statements are prepared from the updated and summarized data.
4. The accounting process includes the following steps:
 - (1) Business documents are analyzed. Business documents provide detailed information concerning each transaction and establish support for the data recorded in the books of original entry.
 - (2) Transactions are recorded in chronological order in books of original entry—the journals. Transactions are analyzed in terms of their effects on the various asset, liability, owners' equity, revenue, and expense accounts of the business unit.
 - (3) Transactions are posted to the appropriate accounts in the general and subsidiary ledgers. The ledger accounts classify and summarize the full effect of all transactions recorded in the journals and can be used in the preparation of financial statements.
 - (4) A trial balance may be prepared showing the account balances in the general ledger and reconciling subsidiary ledger balances with respective control account balances. The trial balance provides a summary of the information as classified and summarized in the ledgers as well as a verification of the accuracy of recording and posting.
 - (5) Adjustments are made to bring the accounts up to date. Adjustments are necessary to record all accounting information that has not yet been recorded and to properly recognize all revenues and expenses on an accrual basis. If a spreadsheet is used (an optional step in the cycle), adjustments may be journalized and posted any time prior to closing. If statements are prepared directly from ledger balances, however, adjustments must be recorded at this point.
 - (6) Financial statements are prepared. Financial statements report the results of operations and cash flows for a period of time and show the financial condition of the business unit as of a certain date.
 - (7) Closing entries are journalized and posted. Balances in nominal accounts are closed into Retained Earnings. Operating results as determined in the summary accounts are finally transferred to Retained Earnings.
 - (8) A post-closing trial balance may be prepared as an optional step in the cycle. A post-closing trial balance is prepared to check the equality of the debits and credits after posting the adjusting and closing entries.
