Abstract

This paper examined the predicaments facing Nigeria and how they have become more manifest in each attempt to attain democratic rule and economic reform. This approach provides an opportunity to observe how respect for human rights, democratization and broad-based sustainable development efforts have interacted with market-oriented economic policies in the past three decades in Nigeria. This paper adopted the analytical method and relies on secondary data and utilizes the content analysis for interpretation of data collected. The paper concludes that It is very critical for senior public administrators and political leaders to make the civil service employees to act ethically, not only in times of crisis or scandal, but on an everyday basis as well. It is also imperative for consideration to be given to ethics in hiring, performance evaluation, and promotion decisions, and that, if the civil service mission includes ethical behavior, then it should be evaluated along with other competencies.

Introduction

This paper is about how public administration can contribute to sustainable development in Nigeria. The relationship between the army junta and federal bureaucracy in Nigeria is used to illustrate how public administration failed during the military regimes in Nigeria. The overall problems of public management in Nigeria is illustrated by several case studies. Nigeria's Structural Adjustment policy, and the difficulties encountered when the federal ministries responded differently, often adversely, to its implementation is also used to reveal the relationship between the military and public administrators in the nation. As background, the study has traced Nigeria's problems with political development, and especially the roles played by the nation's military rulers and higher bureaucrats since the country gained its freedom from British colonialism.

If the future could be predicted, policymakers and public managers could rationally work toward accomplishing known results. Unfortunately, the future is contingent upon many complex social, political, economic, and technological factors. Even if we were able to quantify these factors today, there is no guarantee that they would remain constant in the future. This suggests that predicting the twenty-first century of public management is an impossible task. However, forecasting the twenty-first century is a risky business at best, but trend analysis and speculation about future possibilities may help us understand what events are likely to be continued and how we may avoid certain undesirable consequences if particular scenarios are implemented. The dilemma of centralized economic decision-making and the widespread implementation of policies in Nigeria have taught us a painful but crucial lesson. Economic progress is essentially hampered by military intervention and the patrimonialization of the state machinery. When economic freedom – expressed through the market – is encouraged and strengthened, economic progress thrives. The blatant insignificance of centralized economic decision-making is the primary factor contributing to Nigeria's development's elusiveness. Economic retardation is now the standard argument against government involvement in the economy, and as a result, this line of reasoning has lost credibility. The salient fact is that the primary cause of poverty in Nigeria is poor governance, and the best single solution is less government. Further, the rule of law suffered during the military regimes in Nigeria. In order for Nigeria to develop in the twenty-first century, the rule of law has to be revived to the fullest capacity.

In the twenty-first century, market-oriented policies must be prioritized over government ownership and interference by Nigerian authorities. Economic development and economic management have not and will not be reliably correlated as a result of government involvement in economic matters. Therefore, unless there are a few unique situations that are relevant to the interests of the country, government intervention as a policy choice must end. The somewhat rational preference for some sort of centralized government socioeconomic decision-making as the foundation for nation-building and as a means of modernization has been reinforced by political expediency over the past forty years, but it is now necessary to break away from this policy framework and put liberalized economic policies into place. Almost fifty years after gaining independence and the freedom to formulate and carry out domestic policies

But like so many of the countries in sub-Saharan Africa, those policies are now seen as failing, and it's time to try and end the spiral of hopelessness that the military and its elite bureaucrats have sparked. In order to maintain a higher standard of living and foster an environment that is neither anti-democratic, antisocial,

Sustainable Development For Public Administration:

Sustainable Development for Public Administration John R. Bartle, Deniz Zeynep Leuenberger, 2014-12-18 This groundbreaking text focuses on the application of sustainability and sustainable development theories to public administration practice. It is designed to guide planning, resource management and outcomes measurement for future and current non-profit and public managers. The book introduces sustainable development and related theories, ties these theories to public administration practice and elaborates on applications to specific PA specializations including energy management, transportation, water waste management, urban development, wildlife conservation and higher education. It also includes a chapter specifically geared to outcome measurement of sustainability goals in public and non-profit agencies.

Sustainable Development for Public Administration Caroline Covell, 2016 Reinventing the government was big in the early 1980s, post media presentation that echoed how inefficient the government has been. Ever since the government went through different reorganization processes through the application of different modern management theories endorsed by the politicians such as the Hawthorne theory, the Gantt Theory, Mintzberg Management Theory, Theory X and Y and the Agency Theory, all promise efficient government. However, Ghoshal argued that all these modern management theories are bad theories and they have destroyed the good management practice of a public institution. They were implemented as a trial and error, one fails, try another. As a result, the management system is destroyed. Its administrative system is broken. The organization is becoming dysfunctional and it causes a badly divided government. This damaged system makes it easy for theft, fraud, corruption, bribery, grafts, sabotage, espionage and all kinds of illegal practices. At the same time, the change causes the used to be a professional public institution to become an amateur corporation that is individually managed, personally ruled and undemocratic governance. This paper discusses the theoretical foundation of the bureaucracy and its analysis and once this theory is applied in the administrative system of government, it shows how this damage can be remedied theoretically and applicably.
