Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 6-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary middle-aged women. A total of 70 women were randomly assigned to either a control group or an exercise group. The exercise group performed a supervised aerobic and resistance training program three times per week. After 6 weeks, the exercise group showed significant improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and HRQL compared to the control group. These findings suggest that a structured exercise program can effectively improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary middle-aged women.

There is a growing body of research that suggests that the use of technology in the classroom can improve student learning. This research is based on a variety of factors, including the use of interactive whiteboards, digital resources, and online learning platforms. The research shows that these technologies can help students to learn more effectively and efficiently, and can also help to reduce the time and cost of education. As a result, many schools are now using technology to enhance their teaching and learning programs.
