Agrotechnology for Dryland Farming 2nd. Revised Ed. A.M. Dhopte, 2017-01-01 It is known that dryland farming is not remunerative due to several constraints. Location-specific technologies have been evolved for yield stabilization in dryland farming and conservation of fragile ecosystem by sustainable use of soil and water resources. Drought and flood situations are experienced somewhere in the country in spite of plentiful resources of waters, sunshine hours, but poverty among farmers still exists. This is a point of serious concern. Agrotechniques are alone the answer for low productivity 0.8 t/ha of 90% rainfed farming. To feed over one billion galloping population of country, there is a need to increase the productivity to 1.5 t/ha by 2010 AD. This book deals with seed, soil, watersheds, crop, weed, and nutrient management, use of weather forecast, measure to save crops under abiotic stresses like drought and flooding, selection of crops and variety, reclamation of degraded land, organic recycling, agro-meteorological approaches, water requirement, early harvest on physiological maturity, agro-hydro modelling, and suitable medicinal and aromatic crops to make dry farming remunerative for welfare of common farmers. This is the first comprehensive book where large number of agro-techniques are incorporated. Chapters are written by eminent scientists of national repute who have devoted their life-time to solve probable problems of dryland. Agro-techniques can well be adopted with ease by farmers through extension agencies to avoid bankruptcy. Book includes all relevant aspects of rainfed farming and is therefore a valuable addition in dryfarming and meets the expectations of all those interested in rainfed farming in the country and abroad. Long outstanding demand has thus been fulfilled with this book. The novel approach of editor has made the readers' task quick and minimized their efforts by compiling all agro-techniques together at one place for benefit of farmers.
