Introduction/Notes

Many people believe slavery and racism ended in 1865 with the Civil War. The reality was that slavery and racial hatred became so intertwined in the United States that they were still thriving by 1965, giving us a sense of enduring American traditions. Although it became slavery, however, to suggest throughout that it was inevitable at any of the southern states for white people to make the abolitionist movement a law.

Slavery also spread to other parts of the world.
