Cloud Makers: How Cooperation and Condensation Work

Water is everywhere. It's in the air, on the ground, and even inside you. But have you ever wondered how clouds are made? It's all about cooperation and condensation.

Water molecules are always moving. They are constantly bumping into each other. When they bump together, they can stick together for a short time.

This is called condensation. It's the process of water changing from a gas to a liquid. This is how clouds are made.

Clouds are made of tiny water droplets. These droplets are so small that they can stay in the air for a long time.

The Amazing Journey of a Water Droplet

Imagine a tiny water droplet. It's on a leaf. It's about to fall. But first, it has to go on a journey. It's going to travel through the air, over the ground, and into the water.

The droplet starts its journey on the leaf. It's being pulled by gravity. But it's also being pulled by the air. This is called surface tension.

As the droplet falls, it picks up more water. It's growing bigger. It's also picking up dirt and other things. This is how water gets dirty.

When the droplet hits the ground, it can evaporate. It can turn back into a gas. Or it can seep into the ground. This is called infiltration.

The droplet's journey is never-ending. It's always moving. It's always changing. It's always part of the water cycle.

Rivers to Rain: The Power of Precipitation

Rivers are the lifeblood of many communities. They provide water for drinking, farming, and industry. But where do the rivers get their water? It's all about precipitation.

Precipitation is the process of water falling from the sky. It can be rain, snow, or sleet. It's the only way water gets to the ground.

When it rains, the water can run off the ground. It can flow into a river. Or it can seep into the ground. This is how the water cycle works.

The power of precipitation is amazing. It can create new life. It can destroy old life. It's the most powerful force on Earth.
