

Reconstruction Study Guide

The period following the Civil War was known as Reconstruction. During this time, the United States Congress passed laws designed to rebuild the country and bring the southern states back into the Union. Virginia faced many challenges during this period of rebuilding.

Problems Faced by Virginians:

African Americans experienced injustice, increased violence, and discrimination immediately after slavery ended. After the Civil War, hundreds of thousands of freed African Americans, also known as freedmen, needed housing, education, clothing, food, and jobs.

Another serious problem was that Virginia's economy was in ruins after the war.

- Money had no value.
- Banks were closed.
- Many railroads, bridges, plantations, and crops were destroyed.
- Businesses needed to be rebuilt.

Steps Taken to Resolve Problems:

The Freedmen's Bureau was established during Reconstruction. This federal government agency provided food, public schools, and medical care for freed African Americans and others in Virginia.

Sharecropping became common in Virginia after the Civil War. In this system, freedmen and poor white farmers rented land from a landowner by promising to pay the owner with a share of their crops. Sharecropping used unfair practices that kept people in poverty (not having enough money).

African Americans saw education as a path that would lead to greater opportunities. They pushed for education for their children. Their efforts led to Freedom's First Generation, some of whom became doctors, lawyers, and teachers. Despite the obstacles they faced, many African Americans achieved excellence.

African Americans After Reconstruction:

During Reconstruction, African Americans began to have power in Virginia's government. Black and white men could vote and hold office (though women could not). Black Virginians led the fight to have the first public school system in Virginia.

John Mercer Langston was an important African American leader. He was a free Black man from Louisa County, Virginia. He was educated in Ohio and became a lawyer in the North. He also worked as an abolitionist on the Underground Railroad in Ohio. During the Civil War, Langston recruited black soldiers for the Union Army. After the war, he came back to Virginia, where he served as the President of a new Black college in Petersburg (now called Virginia State University). In addition, he was the first African American elected to serve in the U.S. Congress from Virginia.
