

Before the Wedding

There are many traditions that are done right before and during a Jewish wedding. A tradition is something that has happened for many years and has a special meaning.

In some Jewish families, the parents have baby showers or gifts or blessings for their son or daughter. A traditional shower is a celebration. The women are all together to just relax and also celebrate their daughter or son.

Traditionally, it is more common for female guests to shower their new brides and grooms.

The Wedding Day

Traditionally, the bride and groom don't eat anything before the wedding.

In some Jewish weddings, the bride and groom are given a special gift and they both give their guests something in return. This is called "seudat purim". Sometimes, there is a special drink for the guests.

Traditionally, it is more common for female guests to shower their new brides and grooms.
