

The first of these is the honey bee, which is the most common of all the bees. It is a small, fuzzy insect with a yellow and black striped body. It is known for its ability to produce honey, which is a sweet substance made from the nectar of flowers. Honey bees are also important for pollinating many of the plants that we eat.

The second of these is the bumblebee, which is a larger, fuzzier insect with a black and yellow striped body. It is also known for its ability to produce honey, but it is also important for pollinating many of the plants that we eat. Bumblebees are also known for their ability to fly in cooler temperatures than honey bees.

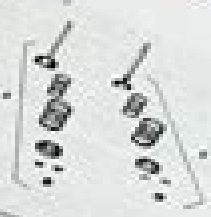

The third of these is the queen bee, which is the largest and most important of all the bees. She is responsible for laying the eggs that will develop into new bees. The queen bee is also known for her ability to communicate with the other bees in the colony.

REPRODUCTION OF BEEHIVES
The queen bee is the only female in the colony that is able to lay eggs. She lays the eggs in a special place called the brood nest. The eggs are then cared for by the other bees in the colony, and they develop into new bees.

The queen bee is also responsible for the overall health and well-being of the colony. She communicates with the other bees and makes decisions about the colony's future.
