Background

The Muscular System

The major function of the muscular system is movement - the voluntary movement, including: pumping the heart, contracting skeletal muscles to move the body, control of facial & neck expressions, etc. Muscles also create heat as they contract, helping to maintain a constant body temperature. Skeletal muscle (voluntary) mostly built of unbranched, striated body muscle. Each muscle is an individual organ made up of muscle tissue, nerves, blood vessels, and connective tissue. There are three types of muscle tissue: skeletal, cardiac, and smooth.

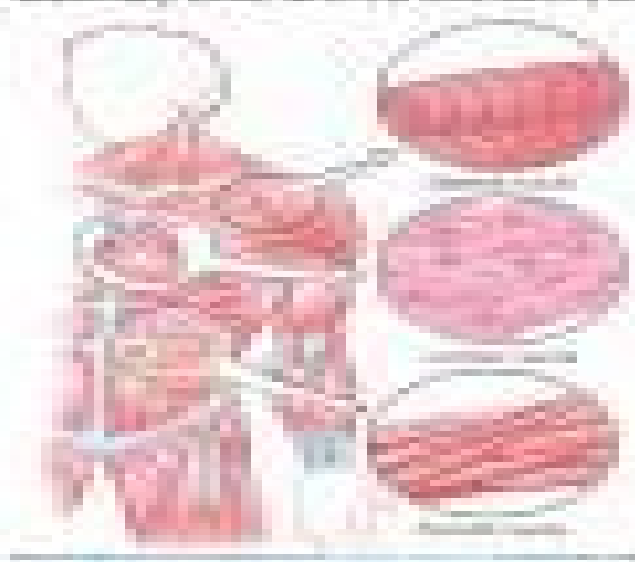

Skeletal Muscle

Skeletal muscle cells (myofibrils) are attached to bony structures.

Skeletal muscles contract voluntarily, meaning that you can control them.

Characteristics: skeletal muscle cells appear to be unbranched (the myofibrils), striated, tapered and multinucleated. Most skeletal muscles are attached to two bony (or cartilage) points. When they contract, they pull the attachment points closer to one another.

Myofibrils are made up of extremely tough collagen fibers in the form of parallel, regularly connected bands. They consist of skeletal muscle fibers, which are long and are surrounded by sarcolemma. Myofibrils are made up of a series of repeating units called sarcomeres. The sarcomeres are the basic units of contraction. They are made up of thick and thin filaments. The thick filaments are myosin, and the thin filaments are actin. The myosin and actin filaments are arranged in a repeating pattern. The myosin filaments are attached to the thin filaments, and the thin filaments are attached to the myosin filaments. The myosin filaments are attached to the thin filaments, and the thin filaments are attached to the myosin filaments. The myosin filaments are attached to the thin filaments, and the thin filaments are attached to the myosin filaments.

Cardiac Muscle

Cardiac muscle is only found in the heart and is characterized by striations and branching. It is found throughout the heart, especially in the myocardium. Cardiac muscle is characterized by its branching, striated, and tapered appearance. It is found in the heart, especially in the myocardium. Smooth Muscle

Smooth muscle, also known as visceral muscle, is the muscle of the internal organs. It is found in the walls of the internal organs, such as the stomach, intestines, and blood vessels. Smooth muscle is characterized by its lack of striations and its ability to contract and relax. It is found in the walls of the internal organs, such as the stomach, intestines, and blood vessels.
