

Establishing an effective energy industry response to Ebola

The World Health Organisation (WHO) is creating a global network of experts to help countries deal with Ebola patients and prevent further spread.

HEALTH CHECK

Dr Brian Otero

The world's largest health company has taken an initiative to help the world's most vulnerable.

The company is a leader in the development of the world's most advanced health care products, and is now using its expertise to help the world's most vulnerable.

While the health industry is the backbone of the world's most vulnerable, it is also the most vulnerable.

While the health industry is the backbone of the world's most vulnerable, it is also the most vulnerable.

This is evidenced by the increasing number of health care facilities, such as hospitals and clinics, being closed or even abandoned in many parts of the world, leaving the world's most vulnerable in a state of crisis.

Health advice

Global health care facilities in many parts of the world are being closed or even abandoned, leaving the world's most vulnerable in a state of crisis.

However, all health care facilities in the world are not in a state of crisis. A number of health care facilities are still open, and are providing the world's most vulnerable with the care they need.

While the health industry is the backbone of the world's most vulnerable, it is also the most vulnerable.

Health care facilities in many parts of the world are being closed or even abandoned, leaving the world's most vulnerable in a state of crisis.

There is a danger that those who do not have the disease, but are displaying similar symptoms, such as fever, fatigue, muscle aches, and general weakness, will be mistaken for Ebola patients, and will be treated as such. This could lead to the disease spreading further in the world.

The WHO strongly advises countries not to travel to the affected areas, and to avoid contact with those who have been infected.

"We also strongly advise non-essential personnel to defer travel to Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone"

World Health Organisation (WHO) is creating a global network of experts to help countries deal with Ebola patients and prevent further spread.

Advice advice

It is important to know the signs and symptoms of the disease, and to avoid contact with those who have been infected.

- If you have been infected with the disease, you should avoid contact with others, and avoid travel to other parts of the world.
