

CHAPTER 2

BASIC MANAGERIAL ACCOUNTING CONCEPTS

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

1. A cost object is something for which you want to know the cost. For example, a cost object may be the human resources department of a company. The costs related to that cost object might include salaries of employees of that department, telephone costs for that department, and depreciation on office equipment. Another example is a customer group of a company. Atlantic City and Las Vegas casinos routinely treat heavy gamblers to free rooms, food, and drink. The casino owners know the benefits yielded by these high rollers and need to know the costs of keeping them happy, such as the opportunity cost of lost revenue from the rooms, the cost of the food, and so on.
2. Accumulating costs is the way that costs are measured and tracked. Assigning costs is linking costs to some cost object. For example, a company accumulates or tracks costs by entering them into the accounting records. Direct materials would be entered into the materials account; direct labour would be entered into the direct labour account. Then, these costs are assigned to units of product.
3. A direct cost is one that can be traced to the cost object, typically by physical observation. An indirect cost cannot be traced to the cost object. The same cost can be direct for one purpose and indirect for another. For example, the salaries paid to purchasing department employees in a factory are a direct cost to the purchasing department but an indirect cost (overhead) to units of product.
4. The cost of goods manufactured is the sum of direct materials, direct labour, and overhead used in producing the units completed in a factory.
5. Prime cost is the sum of direct materials and direct labour. Conversion cost is the sum of direct labour and overhead. Total product cost consists of direct materials, direct labour, and overhead. This is not equal to the sum of prime cost and conversion cost because then direct labour would be double counted.
6. A product is tangible in that you can see, feel, and take it with you. Examples of products include a tube of toothpaste, a car, or an orange. A service is a task or activity performed for a customer. For example, the dental hygienist who cleans your teeth provides a service.
7. Cost is the amount of cash or cash equivalent sacrificed for goods and/or services that are expected to bring a current or future benefit to the organization. An expense is an expired cost; the benefit has been used up.
8. A period cost is one that is expensed immediately, rather than being inventoried like a product cost.
9. Allocation means that an indirect cost is assigned to a cost object using a reasonable and convenient method. Since no causal relationship exists, allocating indirect costs is based on convenience or some assumed linkage.
10. Manufacturing overhead includes all product costs other than direct materials and direct labour. It is because the remaining manufacturing (product) costs are gathered into one category that overhead is often thought of as a "catchall."
11. Direct materials purchases are first entered into the materials inventory. They may or may not be used during the month. Only when the materials are withdrawn from inventory for use in production are they known as "direct materials."
12. The percentage column on the income statement gives some insight into the relative spending on the various expense categories. These percentages can then be compared with those of other firms in the same industry to see if the company's spending appears to be in line or out of line with the experiences of others.
13. The income statement for a manufacturing firm includes the cost of goods sold, which is the sum of direct materials, direct labour, and overhead. The income statement for a service firm includes the cost of services sold. There
