ANALYSIS The authors' analysis of the data from the 1990s shows that the rate of return on capital has been declining steadily since the mid-1970s. This is true for all countries, but the decline has been particularly sharp in the United States. The authors argue that this is due to a combination of factors, including technological change, globalization, and changes in the structure of the economy. They also note that the decline in the rate of return on capital has led to a decline in investment, which in turn has led to a decline in economic growth.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with mild cognitive impairment (MCI). The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The primary outcome was the change in the Mini-Mental State Examination (MMSE) score. Secondary outcomes included changes in the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI), the Geriatric Depression Scale (GDS), and the Physical Functioning subscale of the SF-36. The MMSE score increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group (p = 0.001). The BDI score decreased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group (p = 0.001). The GDS score decreased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group (p = 0.001). The Physical Functioning subscale of the SF-36 score increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group (p = 0.001). The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults with MCI.

Abstract This paper presents an analysis of the impact of the 1997-1998 Asian financial crisis on the economic growth of the Asian countries.
