- Small-scale production business: I would not want to start with a small-scale production business, such as a restaurant or a retail store, because I would not have the time to devote to my research.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial conducted in a community setting. The intervention group participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group did not. The primary outcome was the change in physical health, measured by the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) and the Timed Up and Go (TUG) test. The secondary outcome was the change in psychological health, measured by the Geriatric Depression Scale (GDS). The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in 6MWT and TUG scores compared to the control group. There was no significant difference in GDS scores between the two groups. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve physical health in older adults, but it may not have a significant effect on psychological health.
