

1. The first part of the diagram shows the initial state of the system. The system is at rest, and the forces acting on it are balanced. The forces are represented by arrows of equal length pointing in opposite directions.

2. The second part of the diagram shows the system after a force is applied. The force is represented by a longer arrow pointing to the right. This causes the system to accelerate to the right. The forces are now unbalanced, and the net force is in the direction of the applied force.

3. The third part of the diagram shows the system after the force is removed. The system is now moving to the right with a constant velocity. The forces are again balanced, but the system has a non-zero velocity.

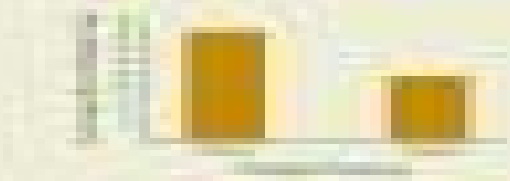

Figure 1: A graph showing velocity on the y-axis and time on the x-axis. The velocity starts at zero, increases linearly, and then levels off to a constant value.

Figure 2: A horizontal bar chart showing the magnitude of forces at three different stages. The first bar is long, the second is shorter, and the third is the longest.
