

State DOT Utility Accommodation and Valuation Categorization Framework

To develop the categorization approach, the research team conducted a review of a voluminous amount of literature, regulations, policies, etc., regarding the statutory and regulatory standards for utility and communications accommodations and their associated fees, property valuations, and charges. This information was organized by state along themes of valuation approaches, fee structures, legislation terminology, and other categories. The results highlight variations regarding public versus private utilities, utility ownership, ROW type, and many other characteristics. The analysis and associated themes were difficult to organize and categorize, yet a categorization method simplified this approach.

3.1 Categorization Framework

Table 3.1 displays the developed categorization framework. The three broad revenue generation categories are in the leftmost column. Details are added to the categorization description while moving to the right. Each column has a unique alphanumeric label. Through the research and the survey undertaken for NCHRP 15-70, it was found that conditions exist in which a state may employ multiple revenue generation category approaches and variations from the other columns above as well. In these cases, a state could be assigned multiple labels through a review of the framework. The categorization of a state DOT by revenue generation category, accommodation mechanism, compensation method, compensation structure, valuation approach, and scheme variation allows for grouping similar state DOT policies and legislation. Further, this approach will also allow state DOTs to reference the policies and legislation of state DOTs that they wish to benchmark. This categorization mechanism is based on the data collected from state policies, legislation, survey feedback, and interviews. The framework is also meant to serve as a template from which a state DOT can define itself along the included criteria.

To compare the state approaches, states were classified according to the categorization mechanism based on (1) revenue generation category, (2) accommodation mechanism, (3) compensation method, (4) compensation structure, (5) valuation approach, (6) scheme variation, and (7) type of utilities charged by DOTs. The Decision Support Tool is organized around these same categorization mechanisms. These categories are further described in the following, along with summary information to provide a current state-of-the-practice view. This summary information comes from the literature review and survey of state DOTs.

Revenue Generation Category

The state DOTs were classified into three generation categories: (A) revenue generating, (B) revenue neutral, and (C) non-revenue generating. As shown in Figure 3.1, 40% of state

Chapter Overview

Following the background and definitions presented in the previous chapter, the intent of this chapter is to present a framework from which to categorize states according to their valuation and compensation approaches. Doing so allows for comparisons across state approaches and the opportunity for a state to migrate toward the approach of others if it seems lucrative.
