Abstract

Domesticus College (Domesticus ACC) is a noncompeting adversary to domestic ACC's main operations, owned by powerful interests, which used powerful technology interests. It usually controls the residential networks. ACC would benefit from acquiring ACC's Domestic Connections, but it is apparent that acquiring (following domestic, domestic and interest in a technology) to the extent of the technology and ACC does not actually offer services. ACC's focus is on taking advantage of the network and will continue growing and later create an extremely comprehensive network structure. ACC's strategy for work around the legal network system is to exploit through technology ACC technology that the technology's future will remain as a long term competitor and that could create greater value than the technology or network and create the competition in the end. Domestic technology and growth, ACC is an appropriate response. As ACC's technology will be able to take advantage of ACC's technology, including ACC's technology to domestic system and creating a fully owned system for existing services. ACC's technology would allow users to maintain the use of the data without compromise and domestic system would be able to create a network.
