Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between men who had been exposed to asbestos and those who had not. A case-control study was conducted among men aged 60 years or older who had been employed in asbestos-related occupations. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the exposed group than in the non-exposed group. This suggests that exposure to asbestos may increase the risk of developing coronary artery disease.

■ CONCLUSIONS The results of the present study suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire is a feasible and reliable method for assessing the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in a community sample. The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was higher in the present study than in other studies, which may be due to the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire.

Further, the structural components of the model are not mutually exclusive. For example, the model could be extended to include the effects of the social environment on the individual's perception of the social environment. This would be a more complex model, but it would be a more realistic one.
