

challenges that the female protagonist would face. Despite not having as much of a tragic storyline like Ohiso, the very core storyline of a young woman experiencing the hardships of finding her life's path is one that nevertheless works with the Japanese viewer. As will be discussed in the section 3, nostalgia is a powerful tool that is frequently utilized in morning dramas. The biggest difference between Ohiso and Amachan is when the storyline takes place. This temporality will create a slightly different form of nostalgia, as I will explain later.

Amachan takes place between 2008 and 2012. Aki Amano is a 18-year-old girl, born and raised in Tokyo. When her mother, Haruko, was 18-years-old, she fled from her hometown of Sodegahama, Kita-suruga in Iwate Prefecture. In 2008, Haruko is informed by a friend that her mother has collapsed. Haruko, with her daughter in tow, rushes back to her hometown only to find out it was a trick.

Haruko's mother, Natsu-happa, is the leader of the town's "Kita-no-Amazun" (Northern Divers). Amazun are traditional female divers who dive into the cold waters without the use of scuba gear or air tanks. This tradition has been going for nearly 2,000 years.<sup>4</sup> They collect a variety of sea creatures such as clams, octopus, sea urchins, and seaweed. The Kita-no-Amazun are known for sea urchins (uri). Once they bring the sea urchins to shore, tourists would pay the amazun to open the sea urchins and feed them. This activity is a huge hit for tourists and the amazun could be considered a traditional idea of idol (see section 3.2); however, the Kita-no-Amazun, the pride of Kita-suruga (and much of its economic prowess), is aging. The town is struggling due to depopulation. Due to the economic struggles of the small town, Haruko was tricked into coming back to become an amazun; however, her daughter, Aki, instead finds inspiration and becomes one. Aki falls in love with the small community.
