Green Tea Recipes Dr Jim Russell, 2021-03-11 Green tea is a plant that comes from Camellia sinensis and buds that have not undergone the withering and oxidation process used to make black tea and green tea is grown in China but its production and manufacture in other countries in East Asia vary in varieties of growth which differ substantially in the variety of substances growing and the horticultural methods used in raising and time of harvest Although there has been no direct research on the possible health effects of numerous green tea rituals there little evidence that drinking green tea has health benefits. Green tea has been shown to be the best beverage after water. Traditional Chinese medicine has innumerable health benefits. Both cardiovascular and urinary diseases, diabetes, kidney disorders, kidney cancer, antioxidants in green tea fight them all. But there is a problem. Most of us do not know the right way to brew green tea. And if you do not brew it correctly, you will not receive the health benefits and end up tasting bitter and gross. So remember that you understand and master the method of brewing green tea. Read on to find out how to make green tea that will rejuvenate and improve your body. But first, let me tell you a little bit about green tea. The practice of drinking green tea began in China. Legend has it that the word "verdant" began with the Emperor of China in 2737 BC when a few tea tree leaves fell into his cup of boiled water. Later Chinese monks started drinking green tea for their health. The health benefits of tea would fit in travel to India and other places to spread Buddhism and the tea miracle drink with them. Thereafter, green tea gained popularity. Green tea, Camellia sinensis, is a native plant that is rich in antioxidants. The green, black, and oolong teas come from the same plant, Camellia sinensis. Green tea leaves have to be kept dry for a long time. The tea pickers harvest the fresh leaves from the apex. The leaves are then processed in a way that prevents too much oxidation. And this is the key to processing raw tea that makes green tea not oxidize. The green tea from China has a long history, whereas the green tea from America is a relatively new arrival. However, both have health benefits. Green tea, Camellia sinensis, is an antioxidant. The traditional method of processing green tea involves withering, then rolling, then drying. It has been found to be anti-irritation and cellulite-reducing. It is also high in antioxidants. Green tea also contains n-3 fatty acid loss supplements, n-6 fatty acids, the metabolic resting rate, and the risk of heart disease. In a NA determining body weight, the magnesium, molybdenum, and selenium supplementation with green tea reduces the risk of type 2 diabetes and prevents cardiovascular disease and urinary diseases, including Alzheimer's. Green tea, when consumed, has health benefits.
