

The Interlopers
by Nathaniel Hawthorne

In a forest of mixed growth somewhere on the eastern slope of the Karpathians, a man stood one winter night watching and listening, as though he waited for some beast of the woods to come within the range of his vision, and, later, of his rifle. But the game for whose presence he kept as keen an outlook was none that figured in the sportsman's calendar as lawful and proper for the chase; Ulrich von Gradwitz patrolled the dark forest in quest of a human enemy.

The forest lands of Gradwitz were of wide extent and well stocked with game; the narrow strip of providence woodland that lay on its frontier was not unsuitable for the game it furnished on the shooting it afforded, but it was the more jealously guarded of all its master's territorial possessions. A famous law suit, in the days of his grandfather, had severed it from the illegal possession of a neighbouring family of petty landowners; the disappointed party had never acquiesced in the judgment of the Courts, and a long series of poisoning affairs and similar scandals had embittered the relationships between the families for three generations. The neighbour feud had grown into a personal one since Ulrich had come to be head of his family; if there was a man in the world whom he detested and wished ill to it was Georg Zerkow, the inheritor of the quarrel and the titious game-watcher and trapper of the disputed border-forest. The first night, perhaps, have died down or been compromised if the personal ill-will of the two men had not stood in the way; as boys they had shared the sap another's blood, as men each prayed that misfortune might fall on the other; and this wind-scourged winter night Ulrich had banded together his foresters to watch the dark forest, not in quest of bear-footed quarry, but to keep a look-out for the prowling thieves whom he suspected of being about, from across the land boundary. The redback, which usually kept to the sheltered hillside during a storm-wind, went rattling like driven things to-night, and there was movement and unrest among the creatures that were wont to sleep through the dark hours. Anxiously there was a disturbing element in the forest, and Ulrich could guess the quarter from whence it came.

He stayed away by himself from the watchmen whom he had placed in ambush on the crest of the hill, and wandered far down the steep slopes amid the wild tangle of undergrowth, peering through the tree trunks and listening through the whistling and skirling of the wind and the restless beating of the branches for sight and sound of the marauders. If only on this wild night, in this dark, lone spot, he might come across Georg Zerkow, man to man, with none to witness -- that was the wish that was uppermost in his thoughts. And as he stepped round the trunk of a huge beech he came face to face with the man he sought.

The two men stood glaring at one another for a long, silent moment. Each had a rifle in his hand, each had hate in his heart and murder uppermost in his mind. The chance had come to give full play to the passions of a lifetime. What a man who has been brought up under the code of a restraining civilisation cannot easily nerve himself to shoot down his neighbour in cold blood and without word spoken, except for an offence against his honour and honour. And before the moment of hesitation had given way to action a deed of Nature's own violence overhauled them both. A fierce shock of the storm had been answered by a splitting crash over their heads, and now they could keep aside a mass of falling boughs and had floundered down on them. Ulrich von Gradwitz found himself stretched on the ground, one arm numb beneath him and the other held almost as helplessly in a tight tangle of broken branches, while both legs were pinned beneath the fallen mass. His heavy shooting-boots had saved his feet from being crushed to pieces, but if his shoulders were not as various as they might have been, at least it was evident that he could not move from his present position till some one came to release him. The descending twig had struck the side of his face, and he had in truth, away some drops of blood from his eyelashes before he could take in a general view of the disaster. At his side, so near that under ordinary circumstances he could almost have touched him, lay Georg Zerkow, alive and struggling, but obviously as helplessly pinned down as himself. All round them lay a thick stream wreckage of splintered branches and broken twigs.

Relief at being alive and exasperation at his captive plight brought a strange medley of pious thank-offerings and cheap curses to Ulrich's lips. Georg, who was early blinded with the blood which
