

Energy in a Mass-Spring System 2

1. Two identical springs (each having constant k) are suspended vertically with identical blocks on the ends (see diagram). The left spring is compressed a distance x below its rest length when the spring is unstretched. The blocks are then released. From this position the springs are slowly compressed a distance x and velocity v is given. Repeat the experiment with springs k and $2k$.

For this problem, compressions of x are given when velocity for the compressed spring is zero. Assume that the velocity is zero at position x .

- (a) What is the initial spring energy when the left-hand spring is slowly compressed to position x ?

- (b) What is the initial spring energy when the right-hand spring is slowly compressed to position x ? What are the spring constant k and x ? Is the spring force constant? What about energy, potential energy, and kinetic energy when spring constant k , x , and v ?

- (c) Repeat the entire experiment with the second set of springs at twice the position x .

- (d) Create separate energy bar graphs for the 4 points the position indicated by the computer when the system velocity is zero. Assume that the velocity is zero at position x the first time.
