Homeostasis Vocabulary Practice

Homeostasis - the ability of an organism to maintain a stable internal environment even when the external environment changes

ATP - energy

Chloroplasts - green organelles that contain chlorophyll, where photosynthesis takes place

Gas Exchange - the process of obtaining oxygen from the environment and releasing CO₂

Guard Cells - cells that control the opening and closing of the pores on the surface of a leaf

Photosynthesis - the process by which some organisms are able to capture light energy and use it to make food from carbon dioxide and water

Dynamic Equilibrium - the constant small corrections that normally occur to keep an organism's internal environment within the limits needed for survival

Feedback Mechanism - a cycle in which the output of a system either modifies or reinforces the first action taken by the system

Stimulus - any change in the environment that causes an organism to react

Pancreas - an endocrine organ that secretes insulin

Insulin - a hormone that prompts glucose to move from the blood into body cells, resulting in a lower glucose level in the blood

Disease - a condition, other than injury, that prevents the body from working as it should

Pathogen - an organism that invades the body, causing disease

Virus - a nonliving particle of protein and genetic material that reproduces by invading a cell

Bacterium - any one of many single-celled organisms without a distinct nucleus

Immune System - the body's primary defense against disease-causing pathogens

Antigen - a molecule found on the outer surfaces of cells that the immune system recognizes as either part of the body or an outside invader

Antibody - a protein, produced by the immune system, that either attacks invading pathogens or marks them for killing

Vaccine - a substance made of weakened, killed, or partial pathogens and designed to protect the body from future invasions of that pathogen

Allergies - a condition in which a person's immune system is overly sensitive to environmental substances that are normally harmless
