

Similarities Between Natural and Artificial Selection

- Both natural selection and artificial selection are two methods involved in the breeding of organisms.
- Both natural selection and artificial selection allow selected characters to pass to the next generation.
- ⇒ However, there are still a substantial number of differences between them that we need to figure out.

Differences Between Natural and Artificial Selection

1. Definition

- Natural selection is the process whereby organisms better adapted to their environment tend to survive and produce more offspring.
- Artificial selection refers to the process by which animals and plants are chosen by the breeder to produce desirable and inheritable characters in the successive generations.
- ⇒ There is an interesting fact: Farmers used artificial breeding even before Darwin's discovery of genetics to maintain inheritable characters which they desired in both animals and plants.

2. Selection

- Natural selection is a nature-made selection process.
- Artificial selection is a man-made selection process.

3. Significance

- Natural selection produces a huge biological diversity => Natural selection can lead to speciation, where one species gives rise to a new and different species. It is one of the processes that can help to explain the diversity of life on Earth.
- Artificial selection produces organisms with selected traits.

4. Occurs in

- Natural selection occurs in natural populations.
- Artificial selection mainly occurs in domestic populations.

5. Importance

- Natural selection only allows favorable characters to be inherited over the successive generations.
- Artificial selection allows only selected traits to be inherited over successive generations.

6. Speed

- Natural selection is a slow process since you're not able to see big changes in a single generation.
- Artificial selection is a rapid process.

7. Effect on Evolution

- Natural selection facilitates evolution through generating biological diversity. If the environment changes, natural selection will then push organisms to evolve in a different direction to adapt to their new circumstances.
- Artificial selection does not facilitate evolution.
