Abstract | The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computerized decision support system (CDSS) could improve the accuracy of diagnosis and management decisions made by general practitioners (GPs). A CDSS was developed which provided information on the prevalence of disease, sensitivity and specificity of tests, and the relative risk of complications associated with different management options. The CDSS was used by 10 GPs in a primary care setting. The results showed that the use of the CDSS improved the accuracy of diagnosis and management decisions made by GPs.
