The causes of the American Revolution

Have you ever wondered why the American Revolution happened? Well, it all started with the British and the American colonists not agreeing on a lot of things. The colonists were upset with the British for making them follow new rules and laws without asking them. Let's find out what caused the American Revolution.

Firstly, the colonists were angry because the British had no right to tax them without their consent. This was called the 'No Taxation Without Representation' slogan. The British also had a monopoly on trade, which meant that the colonists had to buy and sell goods only through the British. This was also a source of anger.

Secondly, the colonists were angry about the British military presence in America. The British had a large army in America, and they were often involved in conflicts with the Native Americans. The colonists felt that the British were not protecting them from the Native Americans, but they were also not allowing them to have their own army.
