2 RESEARCH DESIGN
The study was a descriptive, cross-sectional survey of the prevalence of self-reported symptoms of depression and anxiety among a sample of 1,000 adults aged 18 and over, living in the community. The study was conducted in the United Kingdom, using a nationally representative sample of the adult population. The sample was selected using a multi-stage, probability-proportional-to-size sampling method. The first stage was the selection of 100 primary care practices (GPs) from the General Practice Register. The second stage was the selection of 10 households from each practice. The third stage was the selection of one adult resident from each household, using a random digit dialling method. The sample was therefore representative of the adult population of the United Kingdom. The study was approved by the local research ethics committee.
