1. The major source of energy for most biological processes is the sun. Energy is captured by plants through photosynthesis and is then passed on to other organisms through feeding. The sun's energy is converted into chemical energy by plants, which is then used by other organisms to power their metabolic processes. The sun's energy is also used by plants to drive the water cycle, which is essential for the survival of all living organisms.
2. Plants are the primary producers of organic matter. They convert carbon dioxide and water into glucose and oxygen through photosynthesis. This process is essential for the survival of all living organisms, as it provides them with the energy and raw materials they need to survive. Plants also play a crucial role in the water cycle, as they release water vapor into the atmosphere through transpiration.
