ANALYSIS The 1997-1998 season was the first time in 10 years that the number of people who died from AIDS in the United States fell below 40,000. The decline was due to a combination of factors, including the widespread use of antiretroviral drugs, which have helped to slow the progression of the disease. However, the number of people living with HIV remains high, and the risk of transmission is still significant. The CDC estimates that about 1 million people in the United States are living with HIV, and that about 40,000 people die from AIDS each year. The CDC also estimates that about 100,000 people are newly infected with HIV each year. The CDC is working to reduce the number of new infections by promoting safe sex practices and providing access to antiretroviral drugs. The CDC is also working to reduce the stigma associated with HIV and AIDS, and to provide support for people living with the disease.
