Science (June 2002) will report, commercial applications and the research team's efforts to launch a future space effort. In 2001, the team made two orbital experiments, observing the way in which an incoherently generated laser light beam takes its organization in response to an initial state in a large, partially ordered, but chaotic system. The team's next step is to design an experiment to study the way in which the system responds to a single perturbation.
