Williamson, C. N. Williamson, 2014-01-22 Motor to Biarritz You must be mad said Dick Waring Why I asked though I knew why as well as he A nice way to receive an invitation If you must know it's because the King of Spain will be there visiting his English fiancé Dick answered I wish him happiness said I I hear he's a fine young fellow Why isn't there room in Biarritz for the King and for me The detectives won't think there is nor will they give you credit for your generous sentiments said Dick They won't know I'm there They knew when you went to Barcelona from Marseilles This was a sore subject It is not my fault that my father was as recklessly brave a general and as obstinately determined a partisan as Don Carlos ever had If I had been born in those days it is possible that I should have done as my father did but I was not born and therefore not responsible Nor was it the King's fault that we lost our estates which my ancestors owned in the days of Charles V nor that we lost our fortune we Casa Trianas nor that my father was banished from Spain For the King was not born therefore he was not responsible so why should I blame him for anything that has happened to me It was perhaps ill judged to visit my father's land since to him it had been a land forbidden But a few months after his death when I was twenty one the longing to see Spain had become an obsession And it must have been my evil star which influenced an anarchist to throw a bomb at a royal personage on the very day I arrived at Barcelona thinly disguised under an English name My identity was discovered at once as the son of the great dead Carlist I was suspected and clapped into a cell to wait until my innocence could be proved This was not easy but on the other hand there was no proof against me and after an experience which scourged my pride and emptied my purse I was released only to be politely but firmly advised never again to show the undesirable face of a Casa Triana in Spain
